Qyrq Qyz" in its full production is a 75-minute piece that involves projecting a film onto a large screen set up on a stage, with the nine musicians lit by theatrical lighting and performing a score by Dmitri Yanov-Yanovsky that blends together traditional bardic songs and instrumental music of Karakalpaks, Kyrgyz, Kazakhs, and Uzbeks with compositional elements created by Dmitri. At Harvard in conjunction with music from Professor Richard Wolf's Central Asia class we hope to offer either a straight-up concert presentation of bardic music or perhaps a stripped-down version of "Qyrq Qyz" that includes film and music.
